George Clooney is in the midst of a press trip for his upcoming mini-series, Catch-22, but our eyes are fixated firmly on his wife, Amal Clooney, and her incredible wardrobe on the various red carpets.

First, there was the forest green Oscar de la Renta mini the human rights lawyer wore to the L.A. premiere back on May 7. Held at the TCL Chinese Theatre in Hollywood, Clooney looked luminous in the jewel-toned one-shoulder mini dress. Paired with fuchsia drop earrings, a black clutch, and black suede pumps, it's safe to assume that while most were there to watch her actor husband's new project, Clooney's outfit was the real star of the show.

The press trail then took the beautiful couple back to their hometown of Italy, where Catch-22 was to premiere in Rome on May 13. In keeping with the emerald theme, Clooney opted for a stunning Giambattista Valli spring/summer '18 collection outfit. Comprised of a glittering crop top and high-waisted, embellished skirt, once again the lawyer stole the limelight – and fairly so. According to Page Six, George and Amal Clooney dined at local pasta haunt Antica Pesa (a reported favourite of theirs) afterwards for a celebratory dinner. Be sure to jot that down for your next European sojourn.

The pair then made a beeline for London where the May 15 premiere played host to Clooney's best outfit yet: an iridescent sequined dress. Featuring a strapless, silver bustier and black scalloped skirt, the look was show-stopping for all the right reasons. Worn with her signature plush blow-dry and a pair of low-key black pumps, the lawyer and activist was literally glowing. She also brought along her mother, who looked stunning in a green pants, top and jacket combination. George Clooney, ever the minimalist, wore an all-black suit for the occasion.

Catch-22 is the actor's latest television project, based on Joseph Heller's 1961 antiwar novel of the same name. It premieres May 18 on Stan here in Australia, and even though the fashion isn't as exciting, Clooney and starring actor, Chrstopher Abbott, are certainly a talented duo. It's been getting some rave reviews thus far (which is no surprise given the stellar cast), but even if it was a flop, at least we'd have been witness to Amal Clooney's sartorial talents. Fingers crossed there's more red carpets in their near future.
